The ISP aims to improve Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander participation in sport and recreation. It is a national strategy which, for the first time, attempts to provide for the sport and recreation needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people within a community development focus and in conjunction with all other funding agencies. This approach to Indigenous sport and recreation is founded on the principles of Indigenous self-determination and self-management. Across the country the ISP is put into place and run by Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders for Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders. The ISP has two strands: Community Development and Athlete Development
