Title: Contexts of child development : culture, policy and intervention / edited by: Gary Robinson ... [et al.].

Publication info: Darwin, N.T. : Charles Darwin University Press, 2008.

Physical descrip: xxiv, 242 p. : ill. (some col.), map, ports. ; 25 cm.

ISBN: 9780980384680 (pbk.)

Annotation: "'Contexts of Child Development' is an inspiring and thought-provoking collection that aims to deepen our understanding of child development in order to positively influence the people, policies and practices that help shape childrens lives. Drawing on a range of methodological, theoretical and practical perspectives, and on leading Australian and international research, the volume challenges us to consider issues as diverse as the continuing impact of past colonial policies and practices on Australian Aboriginal child development today; the ways in which a focus on learning through the arts can be beneficial to other areas of development, including literacy; and the potentially disabling consequences of the socio-culturally biased construction of what constitutes a good childhood which currently underpins policy in the UK. A key concern of the collection is to advance insights and understandings of child development in relation to questions of cultural diversity, social disadvantage and state-supported interventions. Hence, many of the contributions focus on the outcomes of child development in Australian Aboriginal communities, including Ernabella and Docker River in the Western Desert, Darnley Island in north-east Queensland, the Tiwi Islands in the Northern Territory, Yakanarra in the Kimberley, and the Yorta Yorta in rural Victoria. While the editors consider that the contributions collectively point to complex patterns of intergenerational reproduction of disadvantage for which there is no single intervention point, they conclude that the challenge for educators, policy-makers, governments and communities alike is to find and follow the ways and means by which it is possible to support the outcomes of child development in order that the deleterious effects of multiple disadvantage might be undone."--Provided by publisher.

Annotation: "Examination of how modernist knowledge traditions and establish narratives as different and hyper-extend their differences into oppositional relationships. Then illustrations of how the far reaching relationships sustained by freshwater mesh together water as a resource for production and a nurturing life force. These relationships are discussed and how they can be understood ethically and intimately through 'connectivity'. Connectivity brings into the foreground our life-sustaining co-dependencies with many living agencies. This is argument is made about connectivity within the context of extensive river degradation and water scarcity in the Murray-Darling Basin. This ecological destruction has mobilised diverse traditional owner groups from along the inland rivers into an alliance. The purpose of their alliance is twofold, to have more influence with government water policymakers, and to build their capacity to be involved in water management within their traditional owner groups. The traditional owners have developed translation tools to speak to policymakers. The author analyses how this intercultural engagement is both translating information and transforming parties, and shows how Indigenous knowledge traditions are part of building a more ethical relationship with water in Australia." Author's abstract
